

Questar Staffing's Sandra Parker

Minister to President and CEO

Twenty-two years in ministry formed a determination to serve and helped Sandra Parker to assume leadership of Nashville's seventeenth largest recruitment firm. Parker didn't leave the ministry behind when she joined the Questar Staffing team and eventually purchased the company after three years of employment. Instead, she focuses on the "many opportunities to help business clients and people who come to Questar Staffing for service and assistance."

Sandra personally served many of Questar's long-time clients for more than ten years. Her firsthand knowledge of the unique needs of Nashville area businesses and a genuine concern for people shapes the way her company treats every person who walks through the door. "Our clients know us as a company with integrity; and the people who come through our door to apply for positions are truly respected and given truthful feedback about their potential to fill our positions. We are highly selective about people who become Questar candidates because of commitments to our business client of providing them the very best candidate in the market. They pay for it, expect it and we deliver the "Best" candidate to them."

Questar business clients represent a wide variety of industries including: health care, finance, banking, computer services, engineering, manufacturing, telecommunication, sales, information technology, parking, administration and clerical operations and includes executive search for top tier positions.

Giving back to the community is one way Questar is a ministry that helps people. "After finding out that one of our candidates was homeless with two small children, we called Dress for Success to obtain professional attire for our candidate's job interview and our staff took up a collection to provide money for gas so the candidate could go to her interview." Most recently, Questar participated in the Hurricane Katrina Job Fair to match evacuees with jobs in the Nashville area.
